On the day of that memorable engazement at Bunker Hill, Coneral Joseph Warren, then in the paime of life, joined the American ranks as a volunteer. "Tell me where I can be useful." eaid he eddressing General Pulnam. "On the redoubt," was the reply; "you will there be covered."

"I came not to be covered," return ed Warren; "toil me where I shall be in most danger danger - till me where the action will be the hattest."

At the meeting of the Committee of Safety, previous to the battle, his friends carnes ly strove to dissuade

Warren, but who does not think it sweet to die for his country?"

When Col. Prescott gave the order to retreat. Warren's desperate courage forlade him to obey. He lingered last in the redoubt, and was slowly retreating when a Reitle holder only. When Col. Prescott gave the order retreating, when a British officer called on him to surrender. Warren proudly his face to face to the foe, received a fatal shot in the forehead, and fell dead in the trenelies.
